WASHINGTON CORRESPONDENCE.

WASHINGTON, D. C., JULY 15, 1874. The difficulty in writing the first letter to a paper lies not so much in what to say, as what to say first. As I propose set ding state the fact of his membership in said National Guard, letters weekly for your readers' attent in of what transpires in the Capital, it don't make so much difference of what is written, as Newark, whether a general or staff officer, commission the correctness of the statements.

Since Congress adjourned, the city has relapsed to its usual summer quietness, and to one not familiar with Washington, it would be difficult to imagine the change from winter, when Congress is in session, the large number of strangers on a visit, the be a public act and shall take effect immediately. hotel corridors crowded and theaters open, to summer when it is quite the reverse. The change is not so great, though, as it was before the war, when even newspapers closed their office, during the hot season.

The late session of Congress commenced in December and adjourned in June, a period of nearly seven months; and in that time the question of Finance occupied the most of the session. Each Senator had his own views on the subject, and each had full scope to ventilate such views. Among them all Senator Morton stood out the most conspicnons for infliction and S nator Jones for to be a public act, and shall take effect immediately. hard money.

The Republican Congressional Committee will soon issue an address to the people. presenting the contrast of Republican administration since 1861 and Democratic administration prior to that time. Three main questions will be dealt with, viz , the Civil Rights Bill, Finance and Transportation, the two latter to be left to future discussion.

The city wears a brighter aspect, now, since the Board of Public Works has completed its "comprehensive improvements," and is greatly improved from what many of recollect miserable couble stone pavements be a public act, and shall take effect immediately. where there were any) and the balance of Approved March 27, 1874. the streets covered with mud in winter and dust in summer. This is all changed. The roadways are now paved with wood or con- A further supplement to an act entitled "An act concrete, and swept daily. What censure there was in it was against the Treasurer of the Board, who was unable to state how his accounts stood. He paid out cash, bonds and Auditor's certificates, and accounted for it all as cash, when bonds were worth 70 per cent. and certificates much less, so it led to suspicion that there was speculation in these certificates and bonds. The treasurer's method of book-keeping is now a standing joke. The serious aspect to the matter, however is the scurrilous way in which the local press attacked the leading memorialists and their counsel, who undoubtedly deemed they were performing a service to the taxpayers. It looked very much as if the would be found out.

Then came the safe burglary business. PATING PLANS. That your readers may know of this affair, I will state that while this investigation was going on, the safe in the office of the Asst. District Attorney was broken into by burglass and papers carried off to the leading memorialist's house. The suspicious part of the affair is that Mr. Harrington, the The Newark Savings Institution, Attorney, says he received an anonymous note that the burglary would take place, and so he got together a party and watched the building. The two burglars passed in and out, with no attempt at secresy, and when it was evident to the chief of police (who was present) that a burglary was to be committed, and when he attempted to make an ar. est, the Asst. Dist. Attorney wanted him to wait and see where the burglars went. When the job was done, one of the burglars walked off, and they havn't seen him since, while the other went to Mr. Alexander's residence (the leading memorialist), and rung the bell for half an hour. As he couldn't get in, they arrested him. The whole affair was so palpably a "put up job" that the House of Representative's attention was called to it, and ordered another investigation before the same committee. They examined a great many officials, and when and is therefore liable to no great disaster like the Chi they reported, they agreed that it was an eago fire.

effort to throw censure upon Col. Alexau-

der. The committee also referred the whole matter, with evidence to the Secretary of the Treasury and Attorney General, and the grand jury is now taking evidence. As the ase is before them, together with Mr. Solicitor Wilson's efforts to find out about the matter, it is probable something disagreeable will be found out.
